globalization. The Council of architecture norms debar the architects to advertise their services or to participate in tender bids, (which are so commonly seen in newspapers, advertised even by the government departments) whereas in the changing business environment, where all service providers do advertise their achievements highlighting their competitiveness, Why to debar the architects. This study significantly shows that almost half are in favour of omitting these clauses from professional code of conduct. Statement Agree Donot Djsagree Missing Architects do not get fee as per COA scale of charges Firms that focus entirely on design will become obsolete Larger the firm easier is the survival Small firms unless specialize will not Survive Architects should be free to advertise their Services Architects have no option than to participate in tender bids -lyl cc Know Cases 93.0% 0.5% 3.3% 3.3% 52.6% 18.8% 24.9 3.8% 56.3% 18.3% 24.4 .9% 58.2% 8.5% 31.9 1.4% 49.8% 16.9% 31.0 2.3% 46.5% 8.5% 41.8 3.3% When asked to rank the most important skill/ ability to run a successful practice, architects across the nation have ranked business ability foremost followed by sound technical knowledge. They also reported, managerial skills especially budget management, project/construction management, are essential for architects. Only 20% agree that these subjects are adequately taught by architectural schools. The results have been cross tabulated across different age groups and few other variables like region, client served and preference of opting architecture as career. Chi-square test applied to find out the difference of opinion among different categories of architects to find out the relationship between various variables at 0.05 level of significance and reported accordingly.
